The Hamilton Spectator (Hamilton, Ontario) 17 OCT 1883

A Romantic Marriage

How a Waterdown Girl was Weeded

To a German Count - the Solemn Service at a Railway Station - both parties formerly of Hamilton.

The inhabitants of the quiet and secluded village of Waterdown have of late been considerably excited in a rather quiet way over the romantic and somewhat mysterious marriage of a young lady, who of late, had been dwelling in their midst. It was the talk of the whole town. The children chatted about it on the green where they played football; women gossiped about it to each other across the fence as they hung out their week's washing to dry in the back yard, and the village loafers told the story over and mingled it with tobacco juice and profanity as they sat o' nights in the hotel bar-room.

The Young Lady's Name is, or rather was, Susie Pense. She is a medium sized, good-looking girl, dark hair and eyes, and a graceful, pretty figure. Her father is a carriage trimmer in Waterdown, but the girl has lived almost all her life with an aunt of hers, a Mrs. Sewell, who at one time resided, with her niece in Hamilton, For some reason, unknown and unimportant, they left Hamilton and went to Waterdown to live. They had previously resided in Waterdown.

Miss Pense is an accomplished girl, well read, and a good, if not a brilliant, conversationalist, and while living in Hamilton was quite a society belle, with herself and her aunt moving in the best circle here. While here she met a tall, lazy, languid looking individual with bright eyes, curly hair, and a long, drooping moustache. The gentleman rejoiced in the lengthy and not exactly euphonious name of Charles Arthur Joseph VanWagner Schmidt. He was a German by birth, as his name plainly tells, and professedly, and probably was, a German count, though no-one could be found around here who was acquainted with his antecedents and would speak authoritatively about it. The gentleman, though, bears amongst those who knew him a reputation for truthfulness, and it is safe to presume that his claim to nobility was correct. His intimates say he had become Financially Embarrassed and had come to Canada to retrieve his fortunes, which is born out by the fact that when he was here he was employed in the offices of a coal oil refinery in the east end.

Charles Arthur was a most charming acquaintance, and the fair sex though he was perfectly adorable. His English was made most romantic and delightful by the foreign sound in it, and his tone of voice was that soft, low, half-drawling order that women so dearly love to here, and which gives the fortunate possessor a rare advantage over a rival whose words are deeper and more manly. On the street, the count was quite a remarkable looking personage, and when he walked he looked as if he was too lazy almost to lift one foot after the other. He was invariably accompanied by a poodle dog, and those that knew him while here will remember that at one time he got in a street brawl with a number of roughs over this petted canine.

Well, as it was said before, Charles Arthur and Miss Pense met, and the story goes that Love's Tender Flame lit upon them both at the same time, and that their eyes were opened and they were filled with a mutual admiration,. At any rate, Charles Arthur, the susceptible, felt the influence of her many charms and yielded up his heart to her without much ado, the while he made love to her with that persistency and devotion which low-voiced, delightfully sleepy young men, who can recite snatches from Tennyson as if they understood him, can do, and he was finally assured that the fair young maiden had yielded to his persuasive voice and manner and given her fragile heart into his jealous keeping. So the story goes. The time came when the count left Hamilton for New York, and shortly after his departure Miss Pense went with her aunt to Waterdown.

In Waterdown the fact soon leaked out that she was engaged to be married to a German count, with whom she was in active correspondence, and the additional fact soon came to light that they were to be married this fall.

Miss Pense had an Elaborate Trousseau made at the village dressmaker's, and many were the wishes expressed that her wedded life would be joyous, peaceful and happy. The day that was set for the wedding drew nearer and nearer, and at last it dawned.

Those in the village who were interested in the marriage assembled in the church at the appointed hour and waited, with the clergyman, the advent of the contracting parties. The hour came and went and neither Miss Pense nor her affianced appeared. Those assembled lingered around the sacred edifice for some time, but they failed to show up. Finally it was given up as a bad job and they all went home.

Miss Pense was not seen in Waterdown again until the flowing evening. Speculations were rife as to the cause of the disappointment at the church, and everybody wondered where she could have been, but it was not until a few days afterwards that the story of the girl's Romantic Marriage leaked out.

From the most reliable information that a SPECTATOR reporter who visited Waterdown yesterday to hunt up the facts of the case could procure, it is learned that the girl's story was that she had received word from her titled lover, telling her that he was en-route from New York to Mexico, and that he would be unable to go to her in Waterdown, but he was bringing a clergyman from Gotham, and if she would meet him they would be married in due form, he would go on to Mexico and she was to await his return. The best authorities say that this programme was carried out. Miss Pense came into Hamilton, met her affianced, and Miss Susie Pense became Mrs. Charles Arthur Joseph Van Wagner Schmidt. She accompanied her husband a short distance along the line, returning to Waterdown the following evening. A few days afterwards Mrs. Sewell had a sale of her household effects and went to Brockville, taking with her the heroine of this romantic love story, where they will wait until Mr. Charles Arthur Joseph Van Wagner Schmidt transacts his business in the wilds of Mexico and returns to his blushing bride.

Col. Emma Pense Dies After Lengthy Illness

Lt.-Col. Emma F. Pense, RRC, who was matron in chief of Canadian army nursing services during the Second World War, died in hospital here this morning after a long illness. Her home was at 189 King Street.

Col. Pense was the daughter of Edward John Barker Pense, at one time owner and editor of The British Whig, forerunner of The Whig-Standard. She was born in Kingston and received her early education here and in Toronto. The retired army officer received her nursing training in the United States.

Col. Pense joined the militia in Kingston in 1911. She was in continuous service with the armed forces from 1914 until her retirement in 1942.

The retired army officer served overseas during the First world War. It was during her service in France that she was awarded the RRC, Royal Red Cross, for outstanding contributions to the nursing branch of the war effort as a nursing matron.

Col. Pense served in France and Belgium in the Second World War in her capacity as matron in chief of nursing services. The branch had about 2,000 members at that time.

She was distinguished as being among the first group of nurses to leave Canada to serve overseas in the First world War.

Since her retirement Col. Pense had maintained a close interest in the nursing services association.

The popular former army officer received many visits during her confinement to hospital. Among these was Brig. Evelyn Turner, matron in chief and director of army nursing services in Great Britain. She exchanged remembrances of war days war days with Col. Pense during a visit to Kingston in May.

Col. Pense is survived by many nieces and nephews, Among these are Mrs. A.N. Chown, Mrs. Charles Hopkins, and Mrs. J.R. Neil, all of Kingston. Mrs. Neil, the former Captain Elizabeth Pense, was a nursing matron during the Second World War and the Korean War. She took the first group of nursing sisters to Seoul in 1952 to organize the Commonwealth nursing service in that country. She was also decorated for outstanding service.
